

History 5:

March 18, 2008

Summary Flow Chart

The farmer flow chart explains how things go in order from ultimate causation to proximate causation. Farmer power starts off as the first causation next it goes to suitable wild species for domestication in fertile crescents. From suitable wild for domestication in fertile crescents two causes form from this, one which is control of breeding which then leads to domestication animals. From domestic animals then comes food surplus. The second one that comes from suitable wild species for domestication animals is control of plants. From control of plants it then leads to Domestic animals. Domestic plants and domestic animals then meet up and both make food surplus. Food surplus then makes more workers to farm from more workers to farm it then leads up to specialized jobs. From specialized jobs, agriculture societies are organized forms. After agriculture societies are organized forms it makes a better economy. With a better economy comes next is a bigger city. So with a bigger better economy and a bigger economy comes last but not the last is bigger armies.